There's a small bathroom inside, but there's an ⁵ _____ shower in the garden that you can use when it's hot in the summer.

Hi, we're Sarah and Jamie!

We're twins. We're also travel bloggers with an interest in tourism that doesn't destroy our planet.

We've always been fascinated by Earthships. We read about them in a travel magazine and we often thought it would be fun to stay in one. While we were planning our family trip around New Mexico, we learned that there were lots of these amazing buildings in Taos, so we immediately booked a stay in one. It was the part of the trip that we were looking forward to most and we weren't disappointed by the experience!

Earthships are very unusual-looking homes. They're long and narrow, and they're made from natural materials and stuff that we throw away, such as old tyres and glass bottles. They're built into hills and they use solar and wind power to generate electricity. The water comes from rainwater collected on the roof. Ours was one of the cosiest and most comfortable places we've ever stayed in.

We loved so many things about our Earthship. The windows were huge, rectangular pieces of glass. I'd imagined these buildings might be gloomy inside, but ours was full of sunlight, helping an enormous collection of indoor plants to grow.

Our little bedroom was really cosy, with brightly coloured blankets and rugs. You'll probably know that Jamie isn't a fan of snakes. While we were getting ready for bed one night, we saw one on the floor. After that, our bedroom windows were tightly closed every night!

Then there were the walls with circular patterns of coloured glass from recycled bottles, reminding me of beautiful old church windows. And the doors, each one a little different, were all made from recycled wood. Clearly, some very creative people had helped to design these Earthships.

Of course, the desert location was fantastic. We saw some of the best sunsets we've ever seen and, when we were awake early enough, some pretty nice sunrises, too! The desert sky was like nothing we've ever experienced. I know this sounds silly, but the sky in the desert is just ... bigger!

When it was time to pack our bags and leave, we were very sad.
